

ALFALFA INSURANCE BY INOCULATION

Alfalfa is a crop that Missouri farmers are growing more extensively, and the following timely statement by William A. Albrecht of the Missouri College of Agriculture will be welcomed by those who contemplate fall seeding. Alfalfa has a great value as a seed for farm animals and its effects in soil renovation make it desirable wherever the soil can be made to produce it.

In the main there are three requirements that the soil must meet for alfalfa; first, it must be deep, with good drainage and fertility; second, it must contain some lime carbonate, and third, it must have the right kind of bacteria. We have quite universally learned — mainly through costly alfalfa failures — that thin, poorly drained soils will not grow good alfalfa. Likewise few men are trying to start alfalfa unless they are sure of sufficient lime in their soil. The needs of alfalfa for the proper bacteria, however, are not so widely known, and many failures have resulted from neglecting to inoculate with nodule-forming bacteria when the crop was seeded.

Inoculation is the simple addition of bacteria to the soil either by applying them directly to the field of indirectly with the seed. The latter method is the more commonly used whether the bacteria come from pure cultures or from the soil of another field already growing alfalfa or sweet clover. Putting bacteria out with a crop is a new experience for many persons and for that reason its wisdom and economy may be questioned; but tests by the Missouri Experiment Station have shown that the use of bacteria for alfalfa at the first seeding on a new soil is a highly profitable practice.

In the first place the bacteria on the roots enable the plant to draw some of its food from the air instead of being limited to the soil, so that a much larger and more nutritious hay crop results. In the second place alfalfa bacteria are not native to our Missouri soils and for that reason must be introduced as inoculation. Extensive tests by the station over three-fourths of the counties of the state have shown that most upland soils that never grew alfalfa respond readily to inoculation. Other states of the corn belt similarly report remarkable increase in the hay yields.

Regardless of what these crop increases may be, inoculation is important enough that without it one may not even get a start of the crop to say nothing of the loss of the seed and labor. Attention to inoculation at the beginning is a form of insurance that one cannot afford to neglect, and for the man who is seeding this legume for the first time this fall it will be poor policy to neglect providing the proper bacteria for the alfalfa.

STUDENT LOSES EYE BY COLLEGE PRANK

Dispatches from Kirksville, Mo., state that Henry Brough, 23 years old, of Moberly, a student at the Northeast State Teachers college in this city, has lost the sight of one eye and the other optic is badly hurt as the result of a prank of another student that resulted in perfume being hurled into the young man's eyes. Wood alcohol was one of the ingredients of the perfume.

It is said that Brough's friend and college mate intended to throw the perfume on Brough's shirt and that the latter detected the bottle. Not only was the eyesight of the young man immediately impaired, but burns similar to that made by strong acids were inflicted on his face. Brough is now under the care of physicians who are making an effort to save the other eye. They declare that his eye will have to be bandaged for some time before the effects of the poison on it can be foretold.

AH, HA! SPAIN HAS IT! THE WHY DISARMAMENT

Madrid in discussing the disarmament conference sought by President Harding reports in their newspapers as follows:

"Raising the question of disarmament is merely a pretext for finding the best way to prevent an armed conflict between Japan and the United States. The danger of such a conflict is clear to everybody, and many think it inevitable, but President Harding is trying to prevent its happening."
